Our beloved Baltimore is a vital American city with a grand history and a wonderfully diverse population. But it faces tremendous challenges. The Baltimore Uprising that began in April 2015 brought many of the city’s deeply rooted problems to the surface and created a unique opportunity to address them and bring meaningful, lasting change.

We believe in a renewed Baltimore, where opportunity is abundant and all people can thrive. For this vision of Baltimore to be realized, we all have to work together.
OSI-Baltimore has been rooted in Baltimore since 1997, its staff and advisory board living and working with the broader community to understand and assess the city’s challenges and move toward solutions. In many ways, the uprising brought the issues that OSI-Baltimore has focused on since its founding into sharper relief.

We seek to eliminate harmful or discriminatory policies, practices, and beliefs that hold residents, especially people of color, in concentrated poverty, and to provide a blueprint for other American urban centers to do the same. All people must have the mobility, access to resources, and optimism to realize their full potential and participate actively in the social, economic, and political life of the city and state.

With an advisory board composed of the region’s foremost leaders, practitioners, and scholars—and a staff of exceptional professionals who are leaders in their fields—we analyzed the root causes of Baltimore’s problems. From there, we identified three interconnected issues that must be addressed if we are to build a thriving city that allows all residents full voice and opportunity.

Even at the very beginning of our work, we knew that real change for Baltimore takes a combination of bold ideas, pragmatic solutions, and persistence.

After the Baltimore Uprising, we have continued working to create a different city. We use a broad set of tools—grantmaking, education, advocacy, technical assistance and investment—to take promising solutions to scale. Together with community partners and policy makers, we are witnessing significant progress in areas that many considered unsolvable. A more equitable future for all is developing before us.

To make this vision a reality...

We help youth feel safe, welcomed, and supported in schools with the resources they need to succeed into adulthood.

We tackle drug addiction by addressing it as a public health issue, to minimize the harms of substance use.

We reduce incarceration for youth and adults, using a lens of racial equity to reduce the damage it imposes on families and communities.

We build a growing corps of individuals working on the ground, directly with the community. Over the past 18 years, we have supported 170 Baltimore Community Fellows—dedicated social entrepreneurs and visionaries. Fellows change lives directly every single day.
The Education and Youth Development program aims to
• Reform and implement attendance and discipline policies and practices that keep students out of school and cause disparate education outcomes.
• Refocus, reduce, and ultimately eliminate school policing to decrease arrests and disparate treatment among student subgroups.

The Baltimore Community Fellowship Network continues to
• Recruit, select and support dynamic, resourceful and committed social entrepreneurs to become Baltimore Community Fellows.
• Build an active corps of individuals committed to revitalizing underserved neighborhoods by providing resources for a growing Community Fellows alumni body, now 170 individuals strong.
• Build relationships among the alumni network to foster collaboration and promote new initiatives.

In 2015, we created the Baltimore Justice Fund to support immediate interventions in response to the Baltimore Uprising. The Fund was created to • Support focused interventions to improve police accountability and police-community relationships.
• Reduce the number of Baltimoreans caught up in the criminal justice system.
• Engage Marylanders, especially young people, in advocacy for programs and policies to increase opportunity and racial justice.

Audacious thinking for lasting change.

At Open Society Institute-Baltimore, we are actively pursuing solutions to three interconnected issues that challenge Baltimore’s progress. In addition, we have created a network of social entrepreneurs working on the ground to change communities for the better. And last year, through the Baltimore Justice Fund, we supported interventions to respond to opportunities created by the uprising to advance racial justice, accountability, and community engagement.

Despite the challenges, we envision a thriving city, one that provides real opportunity for all children and adults, especially those who currently live in poverty and are held back because of racial discrimination.

We know this vision can be realized. We see progress every day.

The Criminal and Juvenile Justice program seeks to • Reduce unnecessary and racially unjust arrests and pretrial incarceration for youth and adults.
• Reform sentencing policies to reduce the prison population safely.
• Remove barriers to successful reentry for formerly incarcerated youth and adults.

The Drug Addiction Treatment program seeks to
• Support robust implementation of health care reforms, with particular emphasis on marginalized populations.
• Support harm reduction policies to reduce the stigma associated with addiction and decrease the negative impact of substance use.
• Increase the strength and effectiveness of community voices calling for more accessible, high quality treatment.

The Education and Youth Development program aims to
• Reform and implement attendance and discipline policies and practices that keep students out of school and cause disparate education outcomes.
• Refocus, reduce, and ultimately eliminate school policing to decrease arrests and disparate treatment among student subgroups.

The Baltimore Community Fellowship Network continues to
• Recruit, select and support dynamic, resourceful and committed social entrepreneurs to become Baltimore Community Fellows.
• Build an active corps of individuals committed to revitalizing underserved neighborhoods by providing resources for a growing Community Fellows alumni body, now 170 individuals strong.
• Build relationships among the alumni network to foster collaboration and promote new initiatives.

* The ad-hoc fund will be phased out.
What does change mean for Baltimore?

Working in partnership with the private and public sectors, we catalyze lasting change in Baltimore and take it to scale.

Highlights of this past year include:

Criminal and Juvenile Justice
- An OSI-Baltimore grantee supported reentry services to more than 130 people serving life sentences who had been released as a result of the Maryland Court of Appeals’ People vs. Unger decision. Nearly all of the returning citizens stayed out of the criminal justice system, demonstrating that long term prisoners, including older prisoners, can be safely released without jeopardizing public safety.
- Following up on earlier work to do away with Maryland’s policy of prosecuting youth as adults, in 2016 OSI-Baltimore, with Community Law in Action, helped educate the public and legislators about the negative effects of placing youth in adult jails, resulting in a new law that prohibits holding youth charged as adults in adult jails.
- OSI-Baltimore dedicated funding to Baltimore organizations on the ground that are organizing and implementing strategies to bring about police reform.

Drug Addiction Treatment
- OSI-Baltimore supported an initiative to train Baltimore City Police to recognize the signs of an overdose and administer naloxone, a life-saving medication. Nearly 2,000 police officers are trained and now carry naloxone, and they have reversed more than 30 overdoses in the first few months of the program.
- We partnered with the Baltimore City Health Department and Behavioral Health System Baltimore to create a public education campaign that provides important information about overdoses and assistance to prevent them, creates opportunities for local physicians to help patients reduce their risk of overdose, and establishes new pathways to treatment.

Education and Youth Development
- We continued to focus on the inequitable impact that out-of-school suspensions have on students of color, particularly black males, thus feeding the “School to Prison Pipeline.” The Coalition to Reform School Discipline brought together Baltimore advocates around school police policy, student arrests, and disparate treatment among student subgroups.
- After supporting school discipline policy changes, OSI created the Center for Positive School Climate at the University of Maryland School of Social Work to implement the policy changes by training educators.
THE PROGRESS

• In the fourth year of the high value high schools initiative, we supported the opening of Bard Early College High School and the integration of a new YouthBuild program into Ben Franklin High School. These efforts create engaging experiences to help students reach their full potential.

Baltimore Community Fellowships Network

• In November, a selection committee, composed of OSI-Baltimore Board members and community leaders, selected 10 new Baltimore Community Fellows that now join a growing corps of talented, entrepreneurial individuals working directly with residents of our city.

• We also capitalized on lessons learned from a Community Fellows Network Analysis, which sought to evaluate the program’s impact on the lives of individual Fellows and on the city as a whole. As a result of the analysis, fellows are deepening their connections to one another, pooling their expertise and sharing knowledge—all in an effort to improve the lives of underserved communities and people in Baltimore.

Baltimore Justice Fund

• We funded 11 organizations founded by alumni of the OSI-Baltimore Community Fellowships Network that are working on such issues as police accountability, police-community relations, reducing the number of Baltimore residents in the criminal justice system, community advocacy, and conflict resolution and trauma-informed care training, among other things.

• We gave support to WYPR for “On the Watch,” a year-long series on police accountability and police-community relations.

• We granted funding to bolster the Baltimore Action Legal Team’s community education, legal observation and representation, and bail support activities to advance police reform and accountability.
We are working to transform the policies and practices that adversely affect so many of our fellow citizens and hold back our region.

The Criminal and Juvenile Justice program works to reduce the use of incarceration and promote justice systems that are fair, used as a last resort, and offer second chances.
